Subject: Updates from Emergencies Act Call

Hi Ashley,

A few new items of interest coming from the call that just ended with federal officials on the Emergencies Act.

- The RCMP indicated that they have given out communiques to protestors in Ottawa telling them they are part of an illegal assembly and need to leave.
- The RCMP is working with major banks to identify those companies and individuals in Ottawa who are involved in the blockades and begin freezing their accounts.
- The RCMP is looking at how to work with provincial and municipal police on how to freeze the accounts of individuals or companies provincial or municipal police identify as participating in a future illegal public assembly.
- The RCMP will provide the names of individuals and companies to banks and the bank is then responsible for freezing the account.
- The RCMP is working on a process to determine how to unfreeze an account after someone has gone home and it is determined that they are no longer actively participating in, supporting or seeking to setup a new illegal public assembly.
- Alberta inquired if police have the authority to prevent an illegal public assembly at a piece of critical infrastructure or designated site before it is established?
- Canada indicated that police can act to prevent an illegal public assembly before is established at piece of critical infrastructure or designated sites. Peaceful public assemblies however are still permitted.
- British Columbia inquired if Constituency Offices are currently included as places where illegal public assemblies are not allowed?
- Canada indicated that Constituency Offices are not currently listed a places (such as Ports of Entry, government buildings) where illegal public assemblies are not allowed but police could act to remove the assembly if there is a expectation of harm to the public and property. Canada indicated that the Minister of Public Safety can designate specific places too in the event of unlawful protests occurring (i.e., lawful protests can continue).

- Saskatchewan inquired if Conservation Officers, Highway Patrol and Sheriffs etc. can enforce the new powers under the Act?
- Canada indicated it is still confirming the details of the enforcement powers available for these law enforcement officials.
